They call places where bootleg hooch is sold "speakeasies", but it's hard to do it after visiting one of 'em.

- The News-Chronicle, January 7, 1930

Introduction

In 1920, the United States government passed the 18th Amendment that banned the production, sale, and transportation of alcoholic beverages. The era of Prohibition, which would last until 1933, had begun.

Organized efforts for a call for a dry America is largely thanks to the Women's Christian Temperance Union that was founded in 1874, and the Anti-Saloon League also organized. The 18th Amendment was proposed on December 18, 1917 and officially ratified on January 16, 1919.

While the story of Prohibition often includes stories of moonshine, raids, and speakeasies, the story in Cumberland County does not mirror that of the stories that came from major cities like Chicago and Philadelphia.

The Temperance Movement

Residents of Cumberland County voted against the 18th Amendment and Prohibition by fewer than 1,000 votes. Despite these close results, Cumberland County was under the strong hold of the Temperance Movement.

In 1933, one Shippensburg resident asked of the newspaper and lawmakers: "...are we going to sit idle and depend on a few church members to fight the most hazardous thing that has ever confronted our nation and the thing that will make murderers, thieves and harlots of our children. It has done it before and it will do it again."

Local Raids

In these speakeasy days a man is never entirely down and out. When he's down he's on his way out and when he's out he's on his way down.

– The News-Chronicle, July 13, 1928

Raids were taking place in every corner of the county. From Enola to Shippensburg, newspapers reported on raids over the distribution of alcohol.

One of the ways athletes become so muscular is by chinning themselves on the speak-easy bar.

Raids and protests were common sights in newspapers and photographs, but everyone with illegal alcohol made the newspaper.

One Cumberland County resident recalled a story about a New Cumberland woman named Mary who went door to door selling vanilla extract. While this may seem like a harmless purchase, housewives purchased the vanilla extract not to bake with but to drink. The vanilla extract was about 80 proof.

Some of the most prominent families in Carlisle had secrets too. Thomas Moore, owner of the Two Mile House in 1932, had a wet bar installed in the terrace room. The bar was retrofitted into an old butler's cabinet; the top of the cabinet and the first drawer lifted out to reveal a working sink. One of the bottom drawers was cut out to allow for the pipes to be fitted in. Any unsuspecting person would never know that the bar existed, for who would open someone's dresser?

Today the wet bar is still in the terrace room at the Two Mile House. The sink is still attached to its pipes and, although only two pictures exist of the wet bar, CCHS staff and volunteers are working to restore the wet bar to its original state.

Conclusion

Prohibition ended for the country in 1933, but that does not mean that the entire country immediately went "wet." A distillery would not open again in Carlisle until 2019 when Hook & Flask Still Works opened its doors. Cumberland County is not exception to this; in fact, two municipalities in Cumberland County – Newville and Newburg – did not go "wet" until May 2021.
